ABSTRACT

These 61 essays are a compilation of bimonthly articles published over a 17-year period. They address various aspects of leadership, such as risk-taking, executive motivation, decision-making, and corporate taboos. They also cover numerous other issues, including general concerns such as father-son relationships, the perils of travel, intelligence testing, civic art, technology, health, cultural understanding, type-A personalities, humor, new management fads, leadership tips from presidents, public relations, affirmative action, time management, psychological training programs, memo writing, the leader as extravert, ethical behavior, men and their toys, seven ways to make a living, enthusiasm, art, weirdo test items, simulated foxholes on a New Jersey beach, the habits of the wealthy, colorless leaders, nature's way, memories of war, an inside look at the Olympics, the rhythms of foreign cultures, a midcareer leadership curriculum for high-potential leaders, notes from a road warrior, and Wall Street rules. The essays frequently employ humor to make their points and are largely derived from the author's personal experiences. (RJM)
